Rising indie-pop duo The Ivy—comprised of singer/guitarist Wyatt Clem and synth player/bassist Shawn Abhari—are thrilled to announce their Spring 2025 North American tour.

The Tulsa-based duo will be joined by the captivating LA-based indie-pop singer and songwriter, LynCS, for the entire tour. Kicking off on March 25th in Albuquerque, the tour will take The Ivy and LynCS through major cities including Los Angeles, Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, Boston, and Nashville, before wrapping up in San Antonio on April 23rd.

In addition to the tour, The Ivy and Lyncs are excited to unveil their upcoming collaboration, "Don't Fall Asleep To This," out February 21st. The track is a poignant anthem that beautifully captures the complexities of long-distance love, blending The Ivy's signature sound with Lyncs' heartfelt lyricism.

ABOUT THE IVY:

The Ivy is the brainchild of Tulsa-based musicians and producers Wyatt Clem and Shawn Abhari, who first crossed paths at The Academy of Contemporary Music in Oklahoma City. Their instant creative spark ignited a journey of relentless experimentation and sonic boundary-pushing. Since that fateful meeting, Wyatt and Shawn have honed a sound that's as fresh as it is addictive, blending sharp songwriting with innovative production.

They made their debut as The Ivy in 2017 with viral singles like "Gold" and "Have You Ever Been In Love." Building on this momentum, they went on to release three EPs and their 2024 debut album, A Door Still Open, solidifying their place as one of indie-pop's most compelling acts. Enchanting audiences with their high-energy live performances, they've headlined their own US tour, co-headlined with DBMK, and shared stages with acts like Grayscale, The Band CAMINO, and LANY.
