Brooklyn trio Memory Entry will drop their debut EP Our World Is Going To Disappear on March 21 via Iodine Recordings+Mind Over Matter Records. Pre-order it here.

The band formed in early 2020 when the three original members got together for an impromptu jam session. They carved out the beginning of what would become the song "Crawler" and parted ways, not realizing they wouldn't step foot into the practice space again for another 19 months due to the worldwide COVID-19 pandemic.

"We slowly began piecing together songs, pulling from our collective screamo, emo, and hardcore roots," says vocalist and guitarist Keith Montgomery. "It was a very slow process, as we were all busy with other bands and creative endeavors. We couldn't decide on a name or a direction and that only slowed things down further."

Fast forward to summer of 2023.

He continues, "I kept having these recurring dreams every night. They seemed so real. The same places; the same people; some familiar and some new. I was thinking a lot about the past, mistakes I had made and opportunities I had squandered. I wondered if all of my best days were behind me. Concurrently with the dreams, I was inspired by several pieces of art I was taking in at the time that coincided with what I had been experiencing at night, and this opened up the idea of the dream world. It felt like there was work to be done — but it couldn't all be done in our physical world. There was more to discover in this other world."

Montgomery finishes, "It was then that Memory Entry settled on a name and the EP came together quickly after. The story of Our World Is Going To Disappear is the story of the band. Starting out simply and lamenting everyday heartbreak, but then slowly awakening, expanding our sonic palette, experimenting with different sounds and vocalizations, finding our identity, getting to know each other and realizing that there's much more out there to discover, in this world, or another world."

The final result is a sonic journey into parts unknown — combining elements of hardcore, noisecore, post-hardcore, and classic screamo. Aggressive but not without moments of melody and beauty, Memory Entry are set to take their place in the world of aggressive music with the release of Our World Is Going To Disappear.

The band has shared the single "Holler Wild Rose." Listen here.

"The song poses this question: Have you ever felt like your entire life led to a single moment... and did you arrive to that moment brimming with optimism only to discover that all of your expectations led to disappointment, that those closest to you are often the people who let you down the most... and that the world you imagined for yourself is merely a figment of your imagination?," Montgomery states.

The record will be limited to a pressing of 200 handmade copies with silkscreened vinyl.
